Daily Bulletin

Pledged to neither Sect nor Party,
But established for the benefit of all.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 3, 1890.

The Friend for December is out. The editor has unfortunately allowed his journal to again drift into partisan politics.

The chestnut crop of a single county in old Virginia has brought $3000. This beats the average "chestnut" crop of the funny newspaper.

Yale College wants $5,000,000 for necessities. This is certainly cool. Yale had better educate her pupils in some cheaper institution, where less money is wanted and more practical economy is taught.

Chicago is to have a "Bellamy Colony." It is expected Chicago will have to do some tall "looking backward" to keep from losing her "colony" in the crowd at the World's Fair.

The European journals are repeatedly making note of the fact that a hotel has been built in Hamburg having a paper facade. Europe is slightly behind again; in the Western United States they have been building entire towns out of paper for years past and selling them to tender-feet from over the sea.

Up to date there are but two important events left unclaimed by the Advertiser, as due to the influence of the late Cabinet, viz.: 1. The successful land sale of last Saturday at Pearl City, and 2. The triumph of the California baseball club. Of course everybody knows the advance in the value of small holdings was an impossibility until the restoration of peace and confidence brought about lately. The re-statement of this fact, however, will give our tuneful morning contemporary a chance to show that the advance in prices, obtained at Pearl City, was due to the building of the Punchbowl road. This can be done with as much consistency as was shown when the Advertiser attempted, a few days ago, to credit the Punchbowl extravaganza with the general improvement in land values taking place lately.

The proof that the California baseball club's victory is entirely due to the late Cabinet is easily established by following the same line of reasoning, viz.: by showing that several members of the Reform party and at least one member of the late Cabinet belong to the Honolulu Athletic Association!

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

Another Interesting Lecture by Prof. W. T. Brigham.

Prof. W. T. Brigham of Harvard University delivered the second of his lectures on "Physical Culture" in the Y. M. C. A. hall last night. There was a large audience composed of professional and business men, mechanics, members of athletic organizations, and pupils of Kamehameha School and of Oahu College.

The lecturer continued his advice from the previous occasion, on the care of the body, based on physiological facts. He emphasized again the importance of thorough cleanliness and urged the necessity of maintaining the regularity of bodily functions. Taking up the matter of popular games and exercises, the learned gentleman expressed scepticism of the unqualified value of walking in this climate, as this exercise induced an excess of perspiration in the steady though moderate heat here prevailing. For persons not physically incapacitated for its practice, riding had lasting effects of invigoration.

Lawn tennis was not much as a developer of muscle but it gave quickness to the eye and precision to the hand. Baseball he eulogized without qualification. It was true there were hurts received in the game, and the "baseball fingers" were familiar deformities, but these were only the froth on the surface. He examined the Boston nine at the beginning of a season and after they had played in the Western cities during the hottest weather, when it was dangerous for ordinary people to exercise in the heat that far exceeded the highest Hawaiian temperature—again at the close, when the players reported themselves feeling better than at the outset of their campaign.

Rowing strengthened the limbs and chest, although it lengthened the arms. Calisthenic exercises were recommended by the lecturer with examples for increasing the lung capacity. Dumb bells were useful but should never exceed four pounds in weight.

Bowling was highly praised. It was even better for women than men. Practice thereof in early life would enable women to pass the most trying ordeal of their lives with but slight inconvenience. There should be bowling alleys at all our large schools. Bowling on the green, that might not be practicable here for want of a sufficiently firm sod, was in great favor even by old men in England and Australia. There were remnants of outdoor bowling grounds, however, from the ancient times on these islands.

Boxing had but few virtues, although it was usually the first concern of an athletic club. It was the first rock, also, on which these organizations split in the Eastern States. The sport was not in good odor except in such half-civilized places as San Francisco. John L. Sullivan was perhaps the greatest boxer in the world, and the speaker having examined him could say that if his head was cut off, he would be a very decent specimen of a man. That boxing did not develop manliness was proved by the notorious brutality of the Boston champion. It was a common thing for him to kick waitresses in restaurants whom he deemed slow in serving him, and once he twisted off the head of a pet canary and threw it at the woman owning it just to wrack his spite.

The professor had fought for the retention of football with some modification at Harvard, inducing the faculty to waive their determination of abolishing it. He had seen the football team at the close of a season with scarcely a spot not bruised on their bodies. Yet the game developed muscle, courage and manliness. Those who went into it did so with the full expectation of being battered and bruised.

The professor spoke of physical deformities and their remedies. Bow legs and bandy legs were not such serious matters as to justify a person afflicted therewith in lying awake nights to worry over them. Bow legs were so common in the Eastern States that none was considered bowlegged unless his dog could run between his legs. In Scotland bow legs were very common, being due largely to letting children walk prematurely. You could not have fresh meat or warm bread delivered to you in a Scotch city Sunday morning although all the gin shops were running in full blast, and parents were too busy drinking gin to look after their children. The cure for bow legs was to be found in trying to strike the knees together at every step in walking.

The lecture occupied over an hour and Prof. Brigham was cordially applauded for his effort.

H. W. SCHMIDT & SONS.

Gigantic Young Importing House—Emporium of General Merchandise.

The importing house of Messrs. H. W. Schmidt & Sons was formally opened July 5 of this year. Its place of business occupies what were once three retail stores in the Fort street front of the Campbell Block, together with the corresponding space upstairs extended over some low buildings. The lower floor has dimensions of 150 front by 120 feet deep, divided in the depth by a cement-covered brick wall with arched openings. The office occupies one-third of the front division with an ample doorway leading into the double sample store alongside. Close to this doorway leading from the office to the front stairs rises a handsome stairway, and in another part of the lower floor is situated the goods elevator. The rear division is one ware room 60ft. x 150ft.

The counting room takes up the front and larger part of the office division. On entering it the first thing that attracts attention is a handsome counter of native kauri wood, that takes a beautiful finish and has become only too rare an article. Mr. H. Loe, accountant, signing the firm name by procuration, is always to be found at the desk here. Mr. Schmidt, head of the house, has a snug private office in rear of the counting room. He being Consul for Sweden and Norway, the coat-of-arms of the twin kingdom is displayed, oil-painted over the door. An ornamental placard of the Atlas Assurance Company of London, of which he is the agent, and Mr. Schmidt's certificate of membership in a European historical society are among the wall ornaments. There is also another coat-of-arms of the same kingdom as before mentioned, and a photograph of the sugar mill on Waimea plantation, Kauai, of which Mr. Schmidt is sole owner.

Mr. K. Podcyn, head salesman, led the BULLETIN reporter all through the ware rooms. In the rear division downstairs are bales of sugar bags; cases of American, English and German goods in many lines; wines, beers and liquors. The house carries stocks of European wines, liquors and beers, and California wines, and is the agency of the John Wieland Brewery, San Francisco. The firm also imports the best brands of American, European and Havana cigars.

The front lower stores are devoted mainly to samples. Here are carpets, rugs, twines, German preserves, provisions, hardware and cutlery, spoons, candlesticks, and dials, traveling baskets, slates, and men, women and children's boots and shoes of all sorts, from the heavy plantation mud paddles to the daintiest French kid dancing pumps.

The ware rooms upstairs are the same width, but 60 feet deeper than those below. They adjoin the room of the Chamber of Commerce and the United States Consulate. Here is a bewildering display on long counters of samples, while the cases from which to draw orders are disposed in the rear. A list of articles alone is formidable. The quantities of goods in the various lines are enormous, being a revelation to one not conversant with the demands of our internal trade. There is everything in dry goods, millinery, and gentlemen's furnishing goods. Flannels, white and wool dress goods, serges, satins, black cashmeres; tailor goods of all descriptions; underwear for ladies and gentlemen, socks, stockings, neckties, collars, quilts, counterpanes, sheetings, blankets, table covers and napkins; European and American, silk, flannel and cotton shirts; umbrellas and parasols; ready-made clothing, boys' suits and baby clothes; silk, linen and cotton handkerchiefs; plaids in all wool and silk, silk plush; veils, belts; feather fans, hand-painted fans, ivory-handled fans; shawls; ladies' trimmed hats in latest styles, children's hats and boys' caps; children's dresses; genuine ostrich feathers, tips and wings, artificial feathers, faces, cretons; velvets in any color; American prints, ginghams and cambrics—these are the lines to be taken in at a glance by the customer in the dry goods department.

There is a glittering variety of gift goods besides. Flags, toys, bronze ware, pen and pocket knives, fancy pipes, sleeve buttons, pocket and note books, fancy soaps, toilet requisites, clocks, watches; lamp shades, flowered, to fit any lamp; spy and opera glasses, microscopes, thermometers and barometers by the best makers, albums in novel designs, masks, etc., are all within the most cursory view, with no telling what may be reserved in the heaps on heaps of boxes and packages all around.

Messrs. H. W. Schmidt & Sons receive new goods by every steam and sailing ship, no matter from what point of the compass. Their stores cannot wisely be passed by traders starting in business or desiring to replenish stocks for Christmas and all seasons.
